My name is Andrew de Koning, and I am faculty member at the School of Hospitality and Tourism at Seneca College. I teach business software courses like Computer Essentials and Business Computer Applications. I am also an associate researcher at the EILab at Ontario Tech University, specializing in technological skills development through online exploration.

My skills background prior to teaching was in web and print publication. I enjoy teaching computer application courses because it allows students to not only develop their software skills, but their creativity and problem solving as well.

Tourism to me is about leaving the city to see nature. I am always looking for great destinations to see mountains and go hiking.
