“This course is more than just a stepping stone in your education; it’s a chance to discover your strengths, challenge your perspectives, and develop skills that will serve you well beyond the classroom and connect with the environment on a different level.”

– Abdulsamad Aileru, Environmental Technology

“As someone who is in the Social Service Worker program rather than an environmental program this still very much related to my program as well. I feel this is going to be the most memorable experience of my entire studies at Seneca.”

– Chris Bocskor, Social Service Worker

“You’ll be part of a diverse group of students from various programs, all sharing a common interest or passion for the environment. Together, you’ll create memories that are not only personally rewarding but will also be valuable as you move forward in your career.”

– Mary Jane Choulov, Environmental Technology

“By emphasizing Indigenous practice and perspective throughout the course, I felt a connection with nature and respect for nature that gave me so many things to use. As an international student, this experience was wonderful and unforgettable.”

– Yan Ming Kwan, Behavioural Sciences

“You will learn about the importance of respecting others’ perspectives in this class like Indigenous communities. Thanks to learning their views and thoughts, now I see trees differently from before taking this class.”

– Shun Suzuki, Environmental Landscape Management
