

Seneca launching initiative to help students develop in-demand soft skills

Published 4/6/2022 by Tiffany Hsieh

Soft skills, people skills, human skills, communications skills ... there's no consensus on what to call the bundle of character traits and interpersonal skills such as creative thinking, communications and problem-solving.

But employers agree: those are the skills that make the difference when they make hiring decisions.

And that's why Seneca is launching a first-in-Canada initiative to prepare students with an array of the skills — beyond technical know-how — that will allow them to thrive, regardless of the program or discipline they are studying.
